Tony the traveller

Tony Giles, from England, loves to travel, and people who meet him are amazed by his determination. Tony has been to every continent on earth.

_____ He travels alone, although he points out that travellers are rarely alone for long. He has gone bungee jumping, taken mud baths, cruised Antarctica, fed penguins, explored ancient ruins.

Tony claims to travel for more or less the same reasons other young people do. He talks about a sense of adventure, the urge to escape from convention life and the trappings of responsibility and the challenge of doing something new. _____ He has also written a book, called "Seeing the World My Way".

What makes Tony truly remarkable, however, is that unlike most travellers, he is completely blind and 80 percent deaf. He says: 'People often ask why a blind person would want to travel the world when they can't see anything when they get there. It is a good question from a sighted person's perspective, but travelling is more than just seeing the beautiful scenery or landscape with your eyes. _____ It is being able to engage with people, feeling different textures, being exposed to an alternative, exciting culture, immersing into another country, and returning home knowing more than I did before I left. Meeting the people, enjoying the food, the sounds, the smells, the atmosphere – I can take it all in.

Tony adds: 'Travelling allows me to experience the world in a multitude of ways. _____ Travelling enables me to obtain a great global education:

tasting unknown foods, hearing new music, and feeling the contours and gradients of mountains, valleys and rivers cannot really be achieved at home or in the study environment – you have to travel to experience life. I can travel because of four things – confidence, wanting to travel, good mobility skills and planning. _____ I have proved that nothing – even disabilities – can stop you living a full life. If you want it, and have a heart for it, you can achieve anything. I desired it so badly that I travelled around the world solo twice. And if I can do it, so can you.
